ANSWER SHEET

Writing 9-11

Getting a job, moving out and starting a family of your own has always been an integral part of growing up; however, nowadays there is a sizable, and growing, number of people staying with their parents even as they near their forties - the so-called "Peter Pan generation".

In my opinion, these people are a burden on society - even though some of them may have jobs and even work rather diligently, in the end they are still wasting their parents' money on their childish hobbies. Not only that, but they also impact the country's population as a whole, as without a family of their own they cannot aid in replenishing it.

But what causes people to live such a lifestyle? I think that ultimately, it comes down to how they were raised. As parents have been becoming increasingly affectionate to their kids, they may have gone a bit overboard. Always getting what they wanted, children have become entitled? and overly dependent on their parents, when the time comes to move out and become adults of their own, these people simply don't know what to do, and retreat back to their parents.

Ideally, people would move out in their early twenties - old enough to work and start a family, yet young enough ~~that~~ to still have a lot of enthusiasm and energy in them.

Overall, I think that "the Peter Pan generation" is influencing society negatively; however, for many of them it's still not too late to realize their mistake and become productive members of society.
